Setthawut ‘Andy’

I have developed a body of work and experience in project brand advertising and corporate branding

I begin a project by listening to my client and understanding their requirements. What is the personality of their brand? What is the tone of their message to market? What are the objectives for their brand? Who are their target audience? Who are the brand's competitors? These are all evaluated to ensure a point of difference is created.”

My Profile

I have many years experience with a natural creative flair and also well developed skills in Graphic design

Present

SC Asset Corporation PLC. Bangkok Real estate Developer

2019-2021

Pruksa Real Estate. Bangkok Real estate Developer

2014-2018

Contract work in Australia from Sydney and Melbourne designing brand and promotional campaigns for hospitality, tourism and international education, particularly Thai restaurants including a contract with the CHATTHAI group in Sydney.

- DAY TIME -

The Boon kitchen produces a mash-up of Thai classics and some inventive mixings on staples with artisanal ingredients from local producers along with a few daily specials. Boon respects tradition, fresh, health-giving ingredients (though sometimes a little pork crackling goes a long way for the soul) and above all, deliciousness.

Find a table, pull up a chair, order a sandwich or a noodle soup, have a coffee maybe a pastry and don't forget the cold pressed Boon juice.

Finally watch the world go by, be happy.

A high price to pay

After Helen Fisher, Mestudent's photographer, returned from a recent trip to Australia, she found that international students may put their safety at risk to get the best deal.

Dr Helen Fisher, Mestudent from Monash University is working on the newly International Student Safety from Crime, and has investigated student accommodation in Australia, the United States and United Kingdom for four years. She said students are overlooking the safety benefits of university accommodation because it is expensive.

"These forms of accommodation tend to come with student support, cheap meals, and on ideal settings to become part of the new learning environment. And this is not being factored into the cost," she said.

"International students commonly seek low-cost shared housing, often in less socio-economic areas - this is not a particularly safe option."

Through the exact number of crimes against international students in universities, Dr Fisher, Mestudent noted international students are mostly vulnerable to petty theft.

"My observations suggest that international students should try to live either on or near campus," she said.

"Areas in need would be those with high unemployment or crime rates. This information is easily obtained from various sources including the Australian Bureau of Statistics website."

Students in private accommodation are also at risk of harassment by landlords, and many increase health and safety risks by overcrowding properties through sub-letting.

Thomas Chng, the National President of the Council for International Students Australia (CISA) said international students face lock knowledge of legal frameworks and local areas. The main problem, he said, was that "international students are not discussing accommodation options through the right channels and sufficient support available."

ADVICE FOR FINDING YOUR ACCOMMODATION
Check your University's website. Look for any student detailing the accommodation options students have, including advice for living off-campus. Usually, universities and homestay options.

If your university does not offer this, you may want to investigate off-campus accommodation.

Firstly, study a map looking at nearby suburbs. Find out about the crime rate of the suburb by searching in the Australian Bureau of Statistics website. Compare accommodation listings on various websites. It will take time to find the right place, so be patient!

If the accommodation you like is some distance from your university, make sure you are close to public transport.

CHECK LIST

- How much is rent per week?
- How much is the bond?
- Does rent include utilities, bills such as water, electricity and internet?
- Who lives in the apartment?
- Are they students or not? How old? How close to your neighbours?
- Have there been a contract outlining the terms and conditions of your rental agreement?
- How long must you rent the place for?

ADVICE
Do not send money or sign any agreement before physically looking at a property. If a friend is coming to visit that week or so in Australia so you can see the condition of your rental agreement.

GET TO KNOW YOUR LANDLORD
Before the apartment and sign an agreement.

"H

ow can I gain work experience without having had experience?" This is an age-old question I am frequently asked by graduate students. I asked if myself many moons ago. "Sometimes you feel you're too inexperienced to gain experience. If you could just get your foot in the door you'd be able to prove your abilities. On your career underway, their about this perceived paradox of all time.

If you're finding the job-hunting process tough, my advice is to volunteer your time on an unpaid basis. As an employer, I believe someone who has volunteered their time to gain experience speaks volumes for who they are, and where their professional motivations lie. Help me the candidate is a genuine, enthusiastic person who possesses initiative. It also exhibits their drive for the work, not financial gain.

workplace is identical, however processes such as deadlines, task management and communicating at various levels are universal. If you have a sound base and can articulate this in an interview situation you will be in a strong employment position.

Furthermore, while you're at university I'd highly recommend involving yourself in extra-curricular activities. Clubs, committees, societies, the more involvement you have in activities that are outside your studies, the more experiences you can talk about and draw from. It's also an opportunity to meet people outside your friendship groups. When I went to university I always tried to sit beside someone different in every lecture. I'd introduce myself. Form myself into a networking situation, a skill that is vital in the business world. Considerable lifetime friendships and connections are built at university and you never know, perhaps they might know someone, parents, family friends, who might be able to help open doors for you.

Now, this might sound a little odd-fashioned, but I never by it's writing a personal note to a professor about my interest. I'm not talking about an email, but actually call or go in and paper and handwrite it. Explain who you are, why you want to work for them and their business. Just one, why you want to work with them and their business. You can go a long way and I'm not just saying that because the star of my career proceeds emails and text messages. Getting a foot in the door is down to you. Your destiny lies in your hands. By being proactive, persistent and prepared to meet the time and energy into kicking in that door, you will.

Experience doesn't always come down to the actual role, either. Working within a professional environment, a business culture, irrespective of the role is an asset to your curriculum vitae. An important consideration for any employer is the ability to validate your understanding of a workplace. Of course no

DOORS ARE THERE TO BE OPENED

Numerous not-for-profit organisations would readily accept a young person with a fundamental knowledge about their professional area of interest. It would provide you with an opportunity to acquire experience and demonstrate to a future, paid employer that you have successfully worked in an organisation and provided a value for service. Whether you're paid or not is irrelevant.

WORKING THE MACHINE

On top of the three-hour class, Barista Basics Coffee Academy also offers an Ultimate Barista, Advanced Milk Texturing and Coffee Art class that runs for two hours.

It didn't stop there. We also learnt about the importance of calibrating the coffee grind during the day to compensate for changing humidity levels. In addition, we learnt how to make an array of different coffees, many of which were consumed on the spot.

My teacher explained how to thoroughly clean our machines, emphasising the health and hygiene aspects of coffee service.

EXAM TIME!
After the practical work, it was time to put our knowledge to the test. Don't worry, if you've been paying attention, you'll have no trouble with the assessment.

REAPING THE REWARDS
Along with learning new skills and obtaining a SASE certificate, the class had many expected and unexpected rewards. After just three hours at Barista Basics, I gained a whole new perspective on the science behind making a great cup of coffee.

Anyone who knows me has already heard about my newfound coffee-making skills. I've also had friends and family members drinking more coffee so I have an excuse to show off. So I think it's safe to say I might have found a new hobby. Anyone who knows me has already heard about my newfound coffee-making skills. I've also had friends and family members drinking more coffee so I have an excuse to show off. So I think it's safe to say I might have found a new hobby.

But on top of it all, I'll no longer spend my time standing to the side of the register at a cafe, confused about all the noises and movements. It's hard work.
